SCM Labs Sponsors Professional Triathlete and 2004 Olympic Hopeful

DENVER – December 17, 2001 - SCM Labs, Inc., a Denver-based software configuration management (SCM) solution provider, announced sponsorship of Tim Key, a professional triathlete and 2004 Olympic hopeful.

Key recently competed in the Ironman Florida Triathlon held in Panama City Beach, Florida in November. "My race went well. I finished twentieth overall in a time of 9:18:11, my best finish by :24 minutes. I was happy," he said.

The perseverance and determination that Key has shown in pursuit of his career inspired SCM Labs CEO Scott Lehman to sponsor the athlete. "He exemplifies the attitude and drive that creates success in any endeavor, whether athletics or software," he said. Lehman has known Key and encouraged him from his earliest efforts.

Key plans to continue to participate in triathlon events in the upcoming 2002 season. Participation in such events will earn him points towards qualifying for the Olympic Trials for 2004. He will likely travel to Colorado in January and February to train with his coach at the Olympic Training Center.
